May Live to See

May Solve Congestion Problems

How You May Live and Travel in the City of 1950

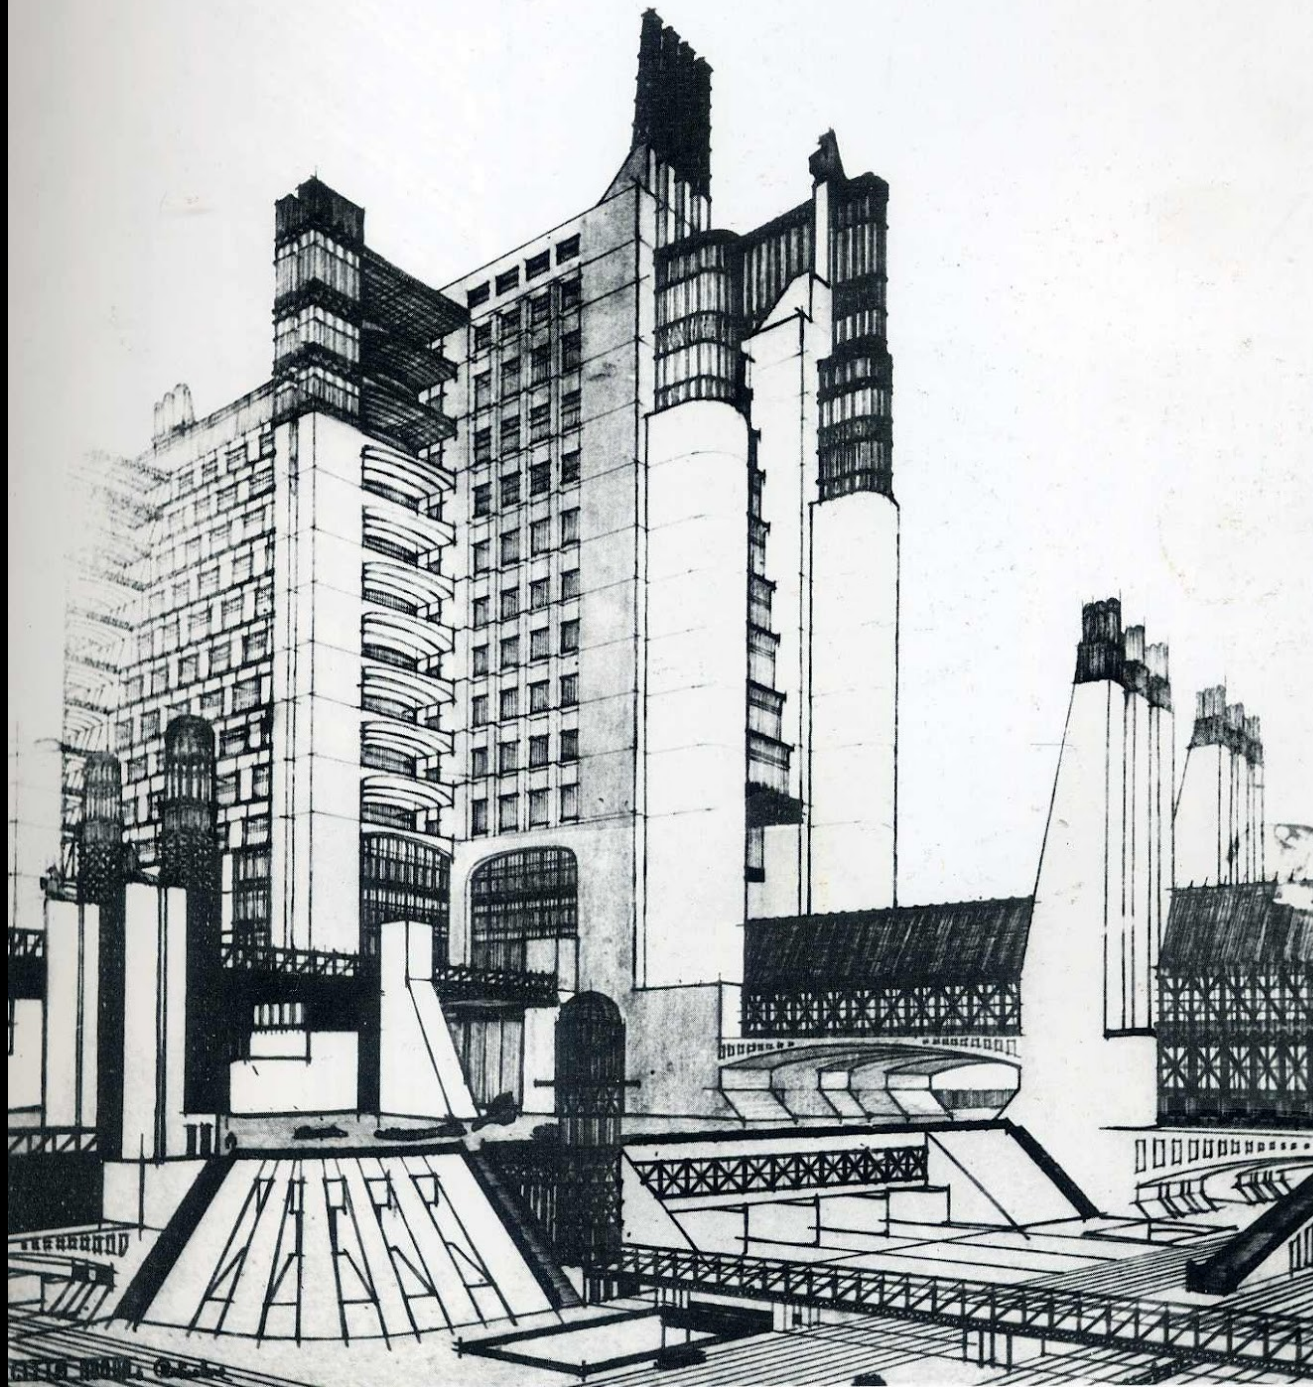

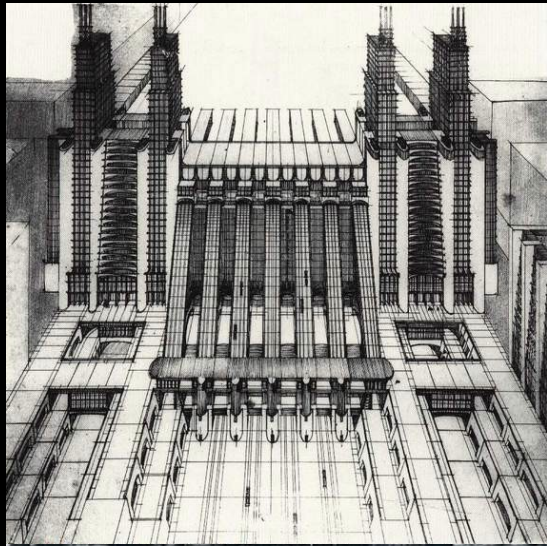

Future city streets, says Mr. Corbett, will be in four levels: The top level for pedestrians; the next lower level for slow motor traffic; the next for fast motor traffic, and the lowest for electric trains. Great blocks of terraced skyscrapers half a mile high will house offices, schools, homes, and playgrounds in successive levels, while the roofs will be aircraft landing-fields, according to the architect's plan

URBAN FUTURE NOW – AUGMENTED REALITY (kiterjesztett valóság)

In March one of our staff designers enhanced the reality of his Washington, D.C., neighborhood. Smart phone applications (apps) added layers of information to what he saw—called out in this composite of five photos, each taken with his phone.

UP AND AWAY Point your phone at the sky and find stars hidden by daylight. Aim at a tourist spot and see its history plus info for visitors. For an augmented-reality check, tap into crime stats.

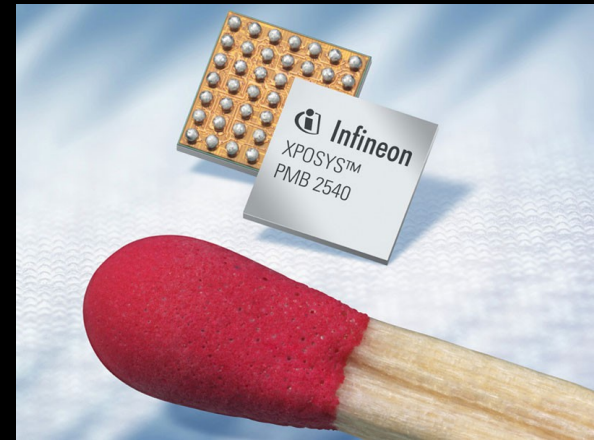

REAL DEALS Various apps can steer you to the cheapest gas around, mass-transit options, good food, and Wi-Fi spots. You can also learn the price of that town house that's up for sale.

STREET PALS The Tweepers Around app tells if tweeters are near. Flickr displays area photos by members (Eastern Market, above). In the works: an app to match faces to social-network profiles.

Welcome to VURB

VURB is a European framework for policy and design research concerning urban computational systems. The VURB foundation, based in Amsterdam, provides direction and resources to a portfolio of projects investigating how our cultures might come to use networked digital resources to change the way we understand, build, and inhabit cities.

THE CITY OF THE FUTURE: SMART AND CONNECTED

According to ABI Research, $39.5 billion is projected to be spent on smart city technologies in 2016. From public transportation to shopping, the city of the future has the potential to significantly transform urban living—and might be closer than we think. This interactive explores not only explores technologies down the road, but also offers a few examples of specific technologies being deployed right now in the Cisco smart city project of Songdo, South Korea.

Russ Dissidents: Mental Hospital Used as Weapon

Evidence Indicates Regime That Avoids Public Trials for Enforcing Conformity

By Richard Goodson

MOSCOW—The Soviet government's use of mental hospitals as a weapon to silence dissidents is a well-documented fact, according to a report by a group of Soviet dissidents.

The report, which is the first of its kind, was prepared by a group of dissidents who were arrested and sent to mental hospitals.

The report states that the Soviet government uses mental hospitals to isolate and control dissidents.

The report also states that the Soviet government uses mental hospitals to prevent dissidents from speaking out.

The report concludes that the Soviet government's use of mental hospitals is a violation of human rights.

The report is a call for international action to end the Soviet government's use of mental hospitals.
